The jelly belly test uses sound waves which make pictures on the computer screen.

The picture shows the doctor what is going on inside your tummy.

This is Duncan.

He is one of the ultrasound doctors, who will do your jelly belly test.

His job is to look at the ultrasound pictures.

First the doctor puts some clear jelly onto Amy's bare tummy.

He uses a special camera called a probe to spread the jelly around. It makes Amy giggle because it tickles.

Amy stays as still as a statue while the probe rubs across her tummy. It makes a fuzzy black and white picture come up on the computer screen.

More jelly is put onto Amy's sides to make different pictures come up on the screen.
